Several individuals were arrested for illegal possession of firearms or making homemade explosives. <sup>356</sup>	BACKGROUND	013
Unlike other civil unrests, little random smashing and looting were observed, as protesters vandalised targets they believed embodied injustice. <sup>357</sup> Corporations that protesters accused of being pro-Beijing, mainland Chinese companies, and shops engaging in parallel trading, were also vandalised, subject to arson or spray-painted. <sup>358 359</sup>	OBJECTIVES	019
Some radical protesters promoted the idea of "mutual destruction" or "phoenixism". They theorised that sanctions against the ruling Chinese Communist Party and the loss of Hong Kong's international finance centre and special trade status (caused by China's interference of the one-country, two systems principle) would destabilise mainland China's economy, and therefore, undermine the rule of the Chinese Communist Party and give Hong Kong a chance to be "reborn" in the future. <sup>371 372</sup> They believed that further government crackdown would ultimately speed up the process of "lam chao", ultimately hurting the regime. <sup>373</sup>	CLASHES BETWEEN PROTESTERS AND COUNTER-PROTESTERS	043
